THE HYPOCHONDRIAC.

I betook me to the doctar,
Fearing trouble of the brain,
My shoulder hurt me sorely
And my spine felt bad again;
I believed doc could not heal me
(O) a badly swollen nose,
(Although a foot no harder
Than the standing on one's toes.)
No my skeleton felt shaky,
And I could not be at ease,
Though I tried to gather courage
And stop shaking at the knees;
But doc laughingly assured me,
As five plunks and I did part,
That I might go home serenely
With a calm, untroubled heart.

ANOTHER RECORD BROKEN.

The Growers House seems to be very fortunate this season in handling quite a lot of fine tobacco, on which they have broken one record after another.

This time $75.00 is the high price of this market and the entire state. Martin O'Neil is the lucky seller, having raised the crop on E. T. Kirk's farm near Washington.

After bidding that bordered on the sensational, between T. B. Duke, J. C. Hurwell and Stanton Clift, the latter had the longest pole and knocked the persimmon and Martin is a happy man. His entire crop averaged $22.

AUTO NEARLY RUNS DOWN PEDESTRIANS.

Tuesday shortly after noon an auto driven by an unknown man came near running down three gentlemen crossing Market street near Second. The auto, which was moving at a speed greater than that allowed by the city ordinances, came around the corner of Second street one the left hand side of the street, narrowly missing several. The three above mentioned pedestrians were almost knocked off their feet and those who saw their narrow escape say it was most miraculous. The allowing of this kind of driving through our streets is dangerous to the lives of the pedestrians and should be stopped at any expense. The number of the auto license of the reckless driver of Tuesday's offense is known, and if he is located he will, no doubt, be prosecuted to the extent of the law.

SOME MORE BILLS

Placed into the Legislative Hopper at Frankfort by Kentucky "Millers."

Frankfort, Ky., January 25.—A bill to prevent betting on race horses in Kentucky was introduced in the Kentucky House of Representatives yesterday afternoon. A. J. Oliver of Allen county, the minority leader, presented the measure. It provides that hereafter it shall be unlawful to use pari-mutuel or other similar machines on horse racing in the state of Kentucky. Violation of the measure carries with it a fine of from $1,000 to $5,000 for each offense.

Two bills, one providing a fine of $100 for untruthfulness in advertising, and the other giving to an infant whose property has been sold for taxes one year after becoming of age in which to redeem it, passed the House.

Both measures were introduced by Representative William A. Perry of Louisville, and he therefore bears the distinction of being the author of the first measure to pass the lower branch of the General Assembly since the present session was convened.

The bill of Representative W. C. G. Hobbs of Lexington, giving to the Circuit Court the right to pass upon the reasonableness of street and sidewalk construction ordinances in cities of the second class was recommended on motion of Harry Meyers of Covington. The House passed Representative Price's bill to assess real estate and improvements separately in second-class cities, and fix license tax according to income, and the measure for second-class cities to acquire law libraries.

The administration corrupt practices and anti-pass bills were reported favorably in the House.

Senator Helm introduced a bill to provide for county detectives in Kenton and Campbell.

Representative Meyers of Covington introduced a bill to regulate jitney buses.

Bills were introduced to register voters in rural precincts of counties containing first, second and third-class cities, and to abolish registration in fourth-class towns.

The $20,000 appropriation for the Literacy Commission was introduced. No member of the commission is to draw a salary.

Unusual values in $1 gowns, $1 skirts, 25c corset covers and drawers. See Hunt's ad other items.

HIGH SCHOOL PLAY.

"A Girl to Order," a rollicking college farce in one act, will be given for the benefit of the Athletic Association Friday night at 7:30 in the High School auditorium.

The troubles of an undergraduate who has been having too good a time "seeing life," are shown convincingly by James January as Dudley Elliott, who convives with his college friends, "Puck," "Bis" and "Lady," to fool Mr. Elliott, who demands explanations for his son's extravagance. Marshall Wood and Robert Willocks as college rah rah boys, and Eugene McCarthy, who impersonates the fiancée of the unlucky "Dud," give true college spirit to the play, while Margaret Smith, the real girl in the case, who arrives just in time to complicate matters, supply the necessary finishing touch.

The High School Orchestra has kindly offered its services for the overture and will play several attractive selections.

Following the play the floor will be cleared and several hours of dancing will be enjoyed.

The proceeds will be used to send the basketball team, that has done such splendid work this season, to the State School Basketball Tournament at Danville, March 3, 4 and 5.

Women's $12½ Coats for $8.50. Children's Coats, 4 to 8 year sizes, half-price. Hunt's.

The iron girders that reposed so quietly for so long a time at Limestone bridge have been removed, but the iron post at the west end of the guardrail has not yet resumed its upright position. It is still lying where the workmen left it.

INTERVENTION?

It is one month and seven days since President Wilson said to Congress, referring to the Mexican situation, "We will aid and befriend Mexico, but we will not coerce her."

The smoothly turned phrase came from the same rhetorical pigeon-hole as "Too proud to fight." It is the President's fondness for the official utterance of these unofficially conceived sentiments that has brought the country to its present state of intense exasperation. He speaks too readily and too glibly.

The people of the United States do not want to fight, but they are not too proud to fight. On proper occasion they would go forth to fight, immensely and righteously proud of their action. The people of the United States desire to aid and befriend Mexico, but they will intervene with armed force to coerce her if that step becomes necessary to stop the murder of American citizens, in the absence of this position or power on the part of recognized government in Mexico to perform its duty to civilization and our flag.

Secretary Lansing's sharp summons to the Carranza government was in itself the stultification of the chief executive's unfortunate phrases. The disgraceful memory of Bryanism in the State Department, of the performances of the fantastic procession of personally accredited envoys to the various Mexican factions and their guerrilla or bandit leaders, of the shameful coddling of the unspeakable Villa as the hope of Mexico's future and the good angel of a new international brotherhood, this whole chapter of wretched waiting comes to an end with that vigorous notification to Carranza.

Intervention if necessary, to any extent of coercion and at any cost. Such is the inevitable sequel to the fine words of President Wilson and to his thirty-odd months of watchful waiting.—New York Sun.

The lowest duty rate recorded by the Underwood law since its enactment was the lemon handed to Uncle Sam by that tariff law the week ended December 25, 1915. On imports totalling $30,799,642, there was paid into the federal treasury revenue in the sum of $2,685,866, on an average rate of duty on imports entered at the thirteen principal customs districts of the United States of 8.7 per cent for the week. Secretary McAdoo must have indulged in a little lurid language when he found that meagre contribution to the public revenues in the treasury's Christmas stocking. No wonder he wants to tax gasoline, horsepower and "various other things," to quote from his annual report. Imports are coming in as never before, but they are coming in for the most part duty free.

Congressman Hilliard (Democrat of Colorado, probably spoke the truth when he declared that no member of the House would, of his own volition, have offered the resolution for the continuance of the "war tax." And yet all the Democratic members voted for the low tariff bill which made the "war tax" necessary. How can Hilliard now escape responsibility?

The same brokers who a few weeks ago were trying to put the market up on the ground of the profits that would accrue to this country on account of the war contracts, are now trying to put it down on account of the loss of business that will come when the war stops.

In the old days the fellows from the city used to sell gold bricks to the farmer. Now the smart farmers from the country get it back on the prices at which they sell eggs and apples to the city.

Many people say they have stopped reading the dreadful war news, but it may not be so much on account of the horrible details as because they like sentimental love stories.

It is surprising to see how it cheers up a grip victim to tell him about the sufferings of other people with the epidemic.

PROLOGUE.
AN ENEMY OF MANKIND.

THE strains of a wondrous cradle song died away slowly as Irving Randolph drew his bow tenderly down the strings of his violin. The love of music was written large in every feature of the young Englishman's face, but fate, making him the master of Randolph Towers, in succession to his deceased father, had spared him the necessity of earning his living with his violin.

He did not need the monetary reward of the genius who takes to the platform. Randolph Towers, set like a gem in the center of extensive estates, is one of the stately homes of England and has been the home of the Randolph family since the days of Edward the Confessor. The family had been large in former days, and there was wealth enough for all, but now the only remaining Randolphs were Mrs. Randolph, the gentle mistress of the Towers, and her two sons, Irving, the musician, and Robert, the spendthrift.

As Irving, tall and vigorous, evoked the hidden soul of his violin his younger brother, Robert, sat in a chair on the porch of the house and brooded over his "wounds." Money was the burden of his thoughts. Life such as he was leading demanded a larger income than was Robert's allowance from the estate of his father, although in the hands of a young man not a spendthrift, addicted to wine and women and cards, it would have been more than ample. For his financial difficulties Robert blamed Irving, unjustly, for his elder brother had brought him out of many a scrape.

Gambling and affairs with women had made heavy drafts on Robert's finances. Inconstancy was ingrained in his nature, and he loved the spice of danger in his love affairs. His latest flame was Mrs. Kelton, the young and pretty and flirtatious wife of a neighboring country gentleman. Paying attention to her was losing with dynamite, for James Kelton's jealousy of his wife was the talk of the entire shire.

"I won't have any more of your going on with young Randolph or any one else," he had stormed at her, but she had only laughed at him and called him "a poor, silly dear." Invitations were out for a reception at the Keltons' home, and the Randolph brothers were invited, much to Kelton's disgust.

Against Irving no word of scandal had been spoken. How could there be when he was engaged to be married to beautiful Ethel Porter, daughter of a neighboring county family, and showed plainly his devotion to her? The two were deeply in love with each other, and, though no date had been set for the wedding, it was understood that they would be married soon. Every day the young couple rode together over the fine roads of midland England.

"Well, I've got to see Irving," said Robert.

Both were good riders. Irving had the best seat and hands in the county. No fence was too high, no hazard too great for him. Next to his music his greatest love was good horsemanship.

Even as Irving drew the last strains from his violin Ethel was hearing Randolph Towers.

"Well, I've got to see Irving—there's no other way out," said Robert half aloud as he rose and entered the house.

At the same time Irving laid down his violin and bow and left his room. At most together the two brothers entered the drawing room. Mrs. Randolph was seated at a desk, and Robert was the first to reach his mother's side. Mrs. Randolph loved both of her sons, but it was plainly to be seen that the younger was her favorite.

"Robert, you are not looking well. Are you ill?" she asked, rising and putting her arms about him.

"No, mother," he replied impatiently, stepping away from her. "I want to see Irving." To Irving he said, "I'd like to have a few minutes' talk with you."

He took Irving aside, out of their mother's earshot. "Irving," he said, "I've got to have some money."

"You've got your allowance for this month," said Irving.

"I know it," said Robert sullenly. "And it's all gone. And I must have a hundred pounds to settle a few bills." "I can't let you have it, Bob," said Irving. "It would be an injustice to mother. I've warned you time and time again against your extravagance."

"Are you quarrelling my sons?" the mother asked. "Irving, what does Robert want?"
"He wants more money, mother. He's had his month's allowance, and he has gone through it already. He wastes his money, mother, and I cannot let him have any more."

"Are you not too hard on your younger brother, Irving?" asked Mrs. Randolph. She went to Robert and tried to soothe him as he stood glaring at his brother, his face flushed and angered.

Irving turned away with a sigh. As he did so his glance passed through the open French windows of the drawing room, and the sight that met his eye drove from his mind all thought of his brother's financial difficulties. Along the broad road that led to Randolph Towers beautiful Ethel Porter was riding to join her lover. With a hurried "Excuse me, mother," Irving went to meet her. In the joy of the meeting the quarrel with his brother and his mother's unintentional injustice were quite forgotten.

While the lovers talked and made their plans for a meeting that night at Ethel's home a visitor of quite a different sort arrived at Randolph Towers. He sought Robert Randolph. In his pocket were certain papers signed by the young spendthrift. These explained the latter's anxiety and his demands on his brother for money. They were promissory notes for £100, made out to the order of Bart Nicholls. They were due, and Bart had come to collect his money or, as he put it, to "raise a fuss with the old lady." The debts were gambling debts and as such not collectable in law, but Bart knew that Robert, with all his faults, was no "welscher."

The Randolphs' butler announced Bart Nicholls. "Oh, dear, that man again! Robert, I do not like him; I wish you would not associate with him," said Mrs. Randolph.
"Oh, he's a good fellow, mother," said Robert, and he went out to greet his visitor.

The burden of their talk was money. Robert pleaded for time in which to meet the notes, giving his brother's "misersness" as his excuse. It met with a sneer. "Why don't you go to your mother for cash?" asked Bart.

"She trusts too much in Irving," said Bob. "And he's so loyal to his majesty that he won't let anything with the king's head on it get away from him. Sh-h-h! Here he comes now."

Having parted reluctantly with his fiancée, Irving returned to the house and came face to face with the creditors. He frowned as he saw Bart. He had no reason to like his brother's associates.

It was not the first time that Robert had pleaded with his brother for money. Sometimes he had succeeded in getting it on false pretenses, but there was genuine distress in his voice now as he begged for help to meet those "cursed notes." "I've got to pay up, Irving; I've just got to pay. My friends know about them. I could never look them in the face again if I didn't pay up. If you help me this time I'll never ask you again. You wouldn't want to see me disgraced and sent to Coventry at the club, Irving, would you?"

With such arguments Bob won his brother over. There was doubt in Irving's mind as to the wisdom of paying these gambling debts of Robert. But the brotherly tie was strong. Perhaps the family honor of the Randolphs was involved, and there was the aging, widowed mother to consider. After all, the estate was large and could meet even Robert's incessant demands for money.

So Irving yielded. And his scapegrace younger brother repaid him by going out that night on a drunken orgy with Bart, while Irving, troubled in mind, went by his sweetheart with neglecting her. But the lovers' quarrel ended, as their quarrels always did, in reconciliation and kisses.

The home of the Keltons, a pretty little place not far from Randolph Towers, was aglow with lights one evening a few weeks after Irving had settled his brother's gambling debts.

Mrs. Kelton was giving a reception, and among the invited guests were Ethel Porter and Irving and Robert Randolph. For months Irving had known of his brother's infatuation for the pretty Mrs. Kelton. It was no secret. All the county knew that she numbered Robert Randolph among her conquests and that her husband looked with a jealous eye on her flirtations.

There had been no open break between the two. Kelton could accuse his wife of nothing worse than flirtatious desire to keep the young man dawdling at her side.

Kelton warned her: "Your guests will talk about you. Let young Randolph alone this evening."

"Very well, my dear," she had promised. But the light in the conservatory was dim, and perhaps both Mrs. Kelton and Bob had had just one or two glasses of wine, and their heads were just a wee bit too close together when Kelton came seeking his wife.

To Kelton's credit be it said that he spoke not a word to his wife or to Bob Randolph. He did not even look at the young man as he offered his arm to his wife. The young woman could do nothing but accept his escort back to the parlor, to her neglected guests. They left Bob standing sleepily in the conservatory, but he was not alone long. Only a minute after the Keltons left Irving entered.

"Bob," said he, "you know this won't do. I just passed Kelton and his wife, and his face shows how angry he is. He's insanely jealous of her, and there'll be an explosion if you don't quit flirting with her."

Bob interrupted him with an angry exclamation, but he went on:

"Perhaps you mean no harm, but Kelton doesn't see it that way. We're lucky he didn't make a scene tonight. For mother's sake, Bob!"

"You'd better go back to Ethel and let my affairs alone, Irving. I can manage them myself."

And with that Bob flung himself out of the conservatory, to spend the rest of the evening sulking in a corner, while flirtatious Mrs. Kelton for once remained discreetly near her husband.

It was some weeks later that the explosion came. Despite Irving's warning and Kelton's open jealousy of his wife and dislike of Robert Randolph, the young man and the woman continued to play with fire. The burning came one day when Mrs. Kelton and Robert met by arrangement in a restaurant for luncheon. There had been a telephone talk after Kelton had seemingly left his home. An appointment was overheard at the one end by the jealous husband and at the other by Irving.

But Kelton restrained his turbulent heart and watched his wife go out without interference; then he followed. As was his wont when troubled, Irving turned to his violin for comfort. But the melodies would not come; his hands seemed to have lost their cunning when his mind lost its rest. So he laid by the violin and the bow and followed Robert and Mrs. Kelton and the injured husband to the restaurant.

Intent only on themselves, Mrs. Kelton and her companion were shown to seats. Under the pendant cloth Robert grasped the woman's hand and pressed it.

"You silly boy! Some one will see us," she said, but she made no attempt to withdraw her fingers.

"Isn't it a jolly lark, lunching here, just you and I together?" said the infuriated young fellow. The head waiter, all attention, came for his order and sent it to the chef. Then he hurried away to the entrance to direct to a seat the monomel, frowning, burly man, who asked for "a seat near that young couple there." And a few minutes later, when the head waiter had shown Irving Randolph to a seat near by, the stage was set for the tragedy.

For a few minutes Kelton watched his wife and Bob laugh and talk, and then his patience broke. He rose with a muttered oath and moved quickly to the side of his wife's table. She was too intent on Bob and he on her for either to notice Kelton's arrival, and he stood there several seconds before the woman looked up and met her husband's eye. There was just a tiny shriek as she rose, and Bob, seeing Kelton, rose also.

"You can't" said the older man, and he lifted his cane to strike at Bob. The cane was caught by Irving, who had stridden quickly to the table. Before the older brother could say a word Kelton turned on him in fury. "How dare you interfere between this whelp and me?" he exclaimed.

Irving held his arm firmly and tried to calm him. Mrs. Kelton had sunk back into her seat, and Robert, fearing to face the music or perhaps perceiving a favorable opportunity to escape, ran rapidly to the door and left the restaurant.

By this time the place was in a turmoil. The guests had risen and had formed an inquisitive ring about the woman and the two men. The head waiter forced his way through the circle and parted Irving and Kelton, protesting violently that his highly respectable restaurant was no place for two gentlemen to settle their differences.

Unfortunately for Irving and luckily for his scapegrace brother, there were two newspaper reporters in the place, and these men arrived on the scene of combat too late to note the preliminaries and the escape of Bob. They got only the names of Kelton and Irving, noted Mrs. Kelton cowering in her seat and built their "stories" around these facts.

And the next day the newspapers proclaimed in large letters:

WEAK KIDNEYS MAKE WEAK BODIES

Kidney Diseases Cause Many Aches and Pains of Maysville People.

As one weak link weakens a chain, so may weak kidneys weaken the whole body and hasten the final breaking-down.

Overwork, strains, colds and other causes injure the kidneys and generally when their activity is lessened the whole body suffers.

Aches and pains and languor and urinary ills frequently come, and there is an ever-increasing tendency towards dropsy, gravel or fatal Bright's disease. When the kidneys fail there is no real help for the sufferer except kidney help.

Doan's Kidney Pills act directly on the kidneys. Maysville testimony is proof of their effectiveness.

Mrs. S. Neal, 497 W. Second St., Maysville, says: "One of my family had a great deal of trouble from a lame back and weak kidneys. Doan's Kidney Pills made the patient better."

Price 50c, at all dealers. Don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—get Doan's Kidney Pills—the same that Mrs. Neal recommends. Foster-McBurn Co., Props., Buffalo, N. Y.

INFANT CHILDREN.

A truant officer has declared that most such children who come under his observation are not properly nourished. Mal-assimilation of food makes children cross, puny, peevish and unruly. Our local druggist, Pecor Drug Company, has in Vinol a reliable non-secret remedy for just such conditions, because it contains iron for the blood, and the medicinal extractives of fresh cod livers, aided by the nourishing properties of beef peptone, and if it fails to make weak, puny, ailing youngsters healthy and good-natured, they will give back your money.

London, January 26.—The English Socialists are gathered in national convention today in Bristol. Opposition to secret diplomatic agreements will be one of the chief issues. The International Labor Party leaders are bitter toward the other Socialist groups who have gone over to the camp of Lloyd George.

ELDERLY WOMEN SAFEGUARDED

Durand, Wis.—"I am the mother of fourteen children and I owe my life to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. When I was 45 and had the Change of Life, a friend recommended it and it gave me such relief from my bad feelings that I took several bottles. I am now well and healthy and recommend your Compound to other ladies."

Mrs. MARY RIDGWAY, Durand, Wis. A Massachusetts Woman Writes: Blackstone, Mass.—"My troubles were from my age, and I felt awfully sick for three years. I had hot flashes often and frequently suffered from pains. I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and now am well."

Mrs. HERBERT COURNOYER, Box 239, Blackstone, Mass. Such warning symptoms as sense of suffocation, hot flashes, headaches, back-aches, dread of impending evil, timidity, sounds in the ears, palpitation of the heart, sparks before the eyes, irregularities, constipation, variable appetite, weakness and dizziness, should be heeded by middle-aged women. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has carried many women safely through this crisis.

PERFECT SERVICE.

Under the co-operation plan which the Home, Independent, Central, Farmers and Planters warehouses are being operated, this season, the Farmers of this section are certainly being benefited. The quickness with which they unloaded wagons at those houses during Monday's and Tuesday's rush, proves that no better arrangement could be made than prevails here. Over three hundred wagons were unloaded, in the above mentioned houses first two days of this week. Those arriving by noon were all unloaded and the owners on their way home before dark, and those arriving early were sold upon day of their arrival. Not a single wagon remained outside. This is a great record and one that could not be made under old conditions. These houses are not only taking care of every person that comes to their doors promptly, but they are also getting the top of the market for every crop they sell. They have sold the highest priced basket, highest priced crop and their general average exceeds the average of the market. Their houses will all remain open, night and day, as long as there is tobacco to be sold and if you go there you will certainly be able to get in. The way they are handling tobacco this year is surely saving the Farmers time and making them money. We congratulate the Home, Independent, Central, Farmers and Planters warehouse companies upon their present arrangement because we know it was made for and is working to the benefit of our farmers.

BUYS $75 TOBACCO

Mr. "Buck" Clift, Expert Tobacco Buyer For R. J. Reynolds, Pays Record Price For a Basket At Growers House Tuesday.

During the last few days tobacco has been coming to Maysville in lively fashion, crowding almost every house to capacity.

Among these heavy receipts is some of the best white burley tobacco grown in the world, and when the buyers look over the baskets that are strung out on the floors they mentally make note of each basket they want for the house that employs them. Tuesday was no exception to this rule. There was some tobacco at the Growers warehouse which looked like prize-winning tobacco, and the minute the buyers saw it the price went up. Long before the sale buyers were hectoring it would bring more than $70 per hundred.

The sale took place eventually and all buyers had a chance to pluck this basket of "cream" tobacco from the lot, but it fell to the good fortune of Mr. "Buck" Clift to carry away the prize. Buck made up his mind to get the basket and he did so after almost every buyer had taken a tilt at the price. His main contender was Mr. T. A. Duke of the American, who fought hard and valiantly, and when the price reached $72 they commenced to bid in quarters and halves, when finally Mr. Huek made a lunge and bid $75 flat and before Mr. Duke had gotten his breath the tobacco was Mr. Clift's, much to the enjoyment of all present, who saw "Buck's" victory.

The tobacco was grown by Mr. Martin O'Neil on the farm of Mr. E. T. Kirk in the county and was the finest delivered on this market so far. The entire crop averaged $22. Some prices for tobacco.
